Public debate and participation in policymaking: monthly update, July 2026

Edition of 2026-08-21 · compiled from the Data Landscapers source base

25 places. Every block below is carried verbatim from that place's own monthly update, where it was written, sourced and checked; nothing is written here.

The place reports do not share one window; the period above is the range they span.

Benin

Benin is ranked fourth in Africa on a 2026 internet-freedom assessment — a reference ranking, cited here and not absorbed into the ledger as a position of the state's own.

Burkina Faso

The same organic law creating the merged communications and data-protection authority folds the broadcasting regulator into it, transferring its mandate subject to promulgation; neither text is held and no commencement, seat or leadership is stated.

Burundi

ABUCO's same 28 July statement proposed a convening — états généraux bringing public authorities, operators, regulators and consumer organisations into one forum — as its remedy, the only instrument a consumer body can reach for; no response from government or operators is on file, and no convening date is stated.

Cameroon

The state set itself a public venue for the question its record does not answer. The posts and telecommunications ministry is hosting the 2026 national Internet Governance Forum in Yaounde from 18 to 20 August, on the theme of moving from fragmentation to interoperability and positioning data as the foundation of interoperable digital public infrastructure, with a plenary on a possible national data-governance strategic framework. The base holds no government interoperability layer and no data-governance framework, so the plenary's subject is an absence rather than an instrument. What is held is a preview: no programme document, participant list or prior edition, and no outcome.

Chad

On 4 August the Haute autorité des médias et de l'audiovisuel announced that it suspends, "jusqu'à nouvel ordre", examination of applications to create online newspapers. The regulator presented the freeze as implementation of its 2026–2028 three-year strategic plan, one axis of which is to clean up the profession and better address "information disorder", and said it would study new arrangements for governing online newspapers with all stakeholders. The communiqué carried no date of its own, set no end date, no published criteria and no transitional treatment for applications already filed, so the outlets already licensed become a closed list for the duration.

Cote d'Ivoire

A consumer federation launched a complaints platform on 30 July charging FCFA 150 per report, with eight stages from filing through mediation to published reports.

DR Congo

A standing consultation mechanism between the ministry and the sector network was agreed at a working session on 6 August, after the dispute over the digital-sector tariff. No constituting text, membership or meeting schedule is stated, and the agreement is known from a communiqué carried by the state news agency.

Egypt

Two administrative reforms are stated and neither is dated. The head of the Council of State told circuit presidents the Council continues to implement an integrated digital transformation plan to speed litigation, naming no system, date or deliverable — the only first-hand record that this branch has a digitisation programme at all. A proposed cut of the VAT credit-refund period to four months, three for smaller firms, still awaits its legislative steps, and will not meet its objects while the problems obstructing proof of balances remain.

Gabon

The suspension of social media has now run about five months, the Presidency calling it temporary and conservatory, with no lifting date given. Nine civil-society organisations call it unconstitutional and beyond the authority's remit and demand abrogation. The decision's text is not held; its February start is inferred from a five-month count and, independently, from an operator's half-year filing, so the date carries month precision only.

Ghana

The statistical service put a number on what digitisation is being asked to fix. Its governance series records citizens reporting demands for unofficial payments rising from 51% in the first half of 2025 to 69% in the second, and the service names digitalisation, fee transparency and public education as its response, citing a marked fall in bribery at the passport office after digitisation and saying the Office of the Chief of Staff has directed the ten institutions the series flagged as high-risk to report back on remediation. The passport-office comparison is asserted without a before-and-after figure, and the series measures reported demands rather than cases proven.

The same week the ministry took the governance argument outward and inward at once: it convened an Accra workshop with a policy-monitoring organisation and a trade endowment on digital governance, regulatory coordination and international digital-trade engagement, framed against the national artificial-intelligence strategy, the coders programme and the continental digital trade protocol; and its deputy minister urged information-management professionals to secure and better manage government data as artificial-intelligence use grows. Neither produces an instrument, and the national data strategy has been in development since 2024.

Guinea

Neither the regulator ARPT, the operators nor the internet service providers issued an explanation for the social-media restriction, and the silence then had to cover more than a restriction: a total two-hour national outage on 7 August, across mobile and fibre alike, was traced to the state landing-station operator, whose officials and the regulator both declined to explain it. The precedent is on the record rather than inferred: under the post-coup transition a government spokesman owned a three-month digital cut and said that in Guinea the internet is not a right.

Lesotho

The state opened a channel for hearing what its digital services are actually like to use: a public survey opened on 9 August covering access, usability, trust and skills gaps across online applications, digital payments and health and education platforms, run with the United Nations development programme as part of a digital readiness assessment. No closing date, sample target or commitment to publish the results is stated, so what it will settle is not yet knowable.

Liberia

On 30 July the Anti-Corruption Commission confirmed it had forwarded a complaint about the telecoms traffic-monitoring arrangement to its investigation unit. No evidence has been publicly produced and no findings made.

The month's one channel built to hear from the public rather than about it was relaunched by donors. UNICEF and UNFPA relaunched the U-Report youth feedback platform on 13 August, with Irish embassy support and under a joint programme with the government, giving young people an encrypted SMS channel to answer polls on health, water and sanitation and other social issues, with responses analysable by county and a target of at least 8,000 reporters. The channel runs on one operator's SIM cards, which bounds who can take part.

Mali

The same 3 August the cybercrime pole sentenced Chahana Takiou to 12 months with six suspended on a charge of undermining the credit of the state through the judicial institution, over remarks at a Bamako media forum in June 2026 arguing that journalists should be tried under press-offence law.

Mauritius

The month's sharpest domestic contribution was an argument about priority. A named analyst published on 2 August the case that contract enforcement rather than technology limits growth, citing the World Bank's 2025 indicators — 42.2 on ease of commercial dispute resolution against Singapore's 73.3 — and more than 70,000 cases pending at end-2025. Its digital prescription is digitalised case management alongside a small-claims process. Analysis, not evidence.

The month's other forum was external in origin. At the national Internet Governance Forum, founded by the Halley Movement, the Blockchain for Good Alliance and the exchange Bybit met the Vice President and the ICT minister to discuss artificial intelligence, cybersecurity and digital-trust frameworks for small island developing states. The record held is the visiting alliance's own press release; no forum programme, outcome document or attendance figure is held.

Morocco

Simplification is law and is not yet practice. A member's written question to the digital transition ministry put the ombudsman's 2025 finding on the record: agencies still ask citizens for paper copies of documents the administration already holds electronically, and impose undisclosed extra conditions, which is what the procedural simplification law was passed to stop. No ministry answer is held. The complaint from the other end is about coverage rather than paperwork: residents of one Sefrou commune are asking for new or strengthened transmission stations, describing reliable connectivity as a condition of schooling, work and emergency access.

Rwanda

The internet governance forum convened in Kigali on 30 July under the domain registry; a regional body announced an internet governance blueprint for a steering committee in September 2026.

Sao Tome and Principe

AGER convened the first Fórum de Governança da Internet \(FGI STP\) on 28–30 July 2026, at Casa Cacau, opened by the Prime Minister, with tracks covering digital trust, service-delivery infrastructure, regulation, privacy and data protection, and AI, framed under the theme of connectivity as a pillar for digital inclusion. It is the regulator's own convening rather than a government ministry's, and the first time São Tomé and Príncipe has run a national forum of this kind. No outcome document or date for a second edition was published.

Senegal

A ministry legal adviser stated that the state has worked on social-media regulation since 2024 with no bill or timetable named.

Seychelles

Parliament amended the Seychelles Broadcasting Corporation Act in June 2026, transferring greater power over the appointment and dismissal of the public broadcaster's board from the independent Constitutional Appointments Authority to the President. The base holds no primary text of the amendment; what it holds is Afrobarometer's August dispatch, which reports it citing Broadcast Media Africa and the International Press Institute, and sets it against the survey it was publishing.

That survey, fielded in 2025, finds 45% of Seychellois calling the media somewhat or completely free, down from 51% in 2022, with 52% saying it is not very or not at all free — a decline recorded on a media environment that Reporters Without Borders ranked 35th globally in 2026, up ten places. Appetite for oversight is not in doubt: 78% want the media to investigate government mistakes and corruption constantly, and 85% back the right to publish without government interference.

South Africa

The rights commission put a position on the record about who should arbitrate what is true online. Launching its policy brief on information integrity, a deputy justice minister said government should not become the custodian of truth on disinformation, while warning against leaving the information environment to private platforms' algorithms, grounding the balance in the constitutional rights to expression, political participation and access to information. It is a brief rather than an instrument, and no legislative proposal follows from it on the record.

Tanzania

The month's one finding about political speech came from outside the state. A civil-society research organisation documented online gendered violence against election candidates as cyclical across successive elections in Tanzania and Côte d'Ivoire, timed to a national election period. No regulator, electoral commission or platform publishes a comparable measurement, so the only quantification of the problem the record holds is the researcher's own.

Togo

The regulator spent August on the road rather than on rules. Its seventh national consumer-sensitisation tour ran from 3 to 28 August with consumer associations and operators, briefing operators and association leaders on electronic-communications rights and, at Bassar, on preventing mobile-money fraud. At the Kara leg on 6 August, local officials asked the regulator to widen its remit to all economic operators — a request to be regulated more, not less, and the clearest signal in the record of what consumers think the alternative is. No attendance figure, complaint volume or outcome measure for the tour is published.

Uganda

The same day, revised media guidelines issued through the electronic court case-management system required prior accreditation, barred devices from a courtroom and made live broadcasting a case-by-case grant.

Reporting of 29 July recorded that no work had begun on the revenue authority's e-Tax2 procurement, whose technical evaluation the Appeals Tribunal set aside in October 2025 on a power-of-attorney defect; joint-venture staff have been on the authority's premises since January and none of 26 commercial banks would issue the performance guarantee gating the advance.

The month's set-piece was a convening rather than a decision: Internet Governance Week 2026 called for greater investment in digital skills, online safety and responsible artificial intelligence, and for Africa to move from consuming the technology to shaping it. Nothing was adopted, and no instrument on this ledger moved as a result.

Zambia

The same Postal and Courier Services Bill consultation — the only open public call for written comment on a Zambian instrument the wiki holds for the whole window — closed three days after the call for written submissions was reported, with no submission count, published response or consultation report held.

On 1 August the Human Rights Commission disclosed that its case review meeting had considered 105 alleged violations linked to the election period, of which 62 were resolved administratively.

The election itself, on 13 August, produced the fullest external account of the country's digital systems the base holds. Observer missions recorded a hybrid digital and manual voter-registration system with an online pre-registration portal, logging 8,786,300 registered voters, up 25% since 2021. A domestic coalition found election-day process largely transparent but flagged an online-only accreditation system that blocked 11 accredited monitors, and the electoral commission's refusal to share the voters register. The European mission found online free expression unduly curtailed under the 2025 Cyber Security Act amid arrests for speech offences, and a regional media institute recorded a journalist detained for two weeks under the Cyber Crimes Act and judged the access-to-information law and decriminalised defamation paper victories undermined by the two 2025 statutes. These are preliminary statements; no final report, government response or commission account of the accreditation and register decisions is held.

Figures are dated because most are time-varying: a figure carries the date it was true, not the date you are reading it. Where the base holds no reliable statement, the document says Not held rather than leaving a silence — those are counted, and listed at the end.

This is a dated edition and is not revised after publication. If a figure here has moved, the current edition will say so.
